The problem of unpaid revenue.

- In introducing the permanent settlement, the British hoped to resolve the problems they had been facing since the conquest of Bengal.
- The rural economy in Bengal was in crisis with recurrent famines and declining agriculture output.
- The problem lay in identifying individuals who could both improve agriculture and contract to pay the fixed revenue to the state.
- The permanent settlement was made with the rajas and taluqdars of Bengal.
- They were classified as Zamindars and had to pay the revenue that was fixed.
- The Zamindar was not the landowner in the village, but a revenue Collector of the state.
- The zamindar collected rent from different villages, paid the revenue to the company, and retained the differences as his income.
- He was expected to pay the Company regularly, failing which his estate could be auctioned.

Why zamindars defaulted on payments:

- The initial demand was very high: It was felt that if the demand was fixed for all time to come the company would never be able to claim a share of increased income from land when prices rose and cultivation expanded.
  - The company increased the revenue and argued that the burden on the Zamindar would decline as agriculture production expands and price rose.

II Imposition of high demand:

- The price of agriculture produce was depressed, the ryots could not pay their dues to the zamindar.
- The zamindar could not collect the rent and was not able to pay the company.

III The revenue was invariable:

- The revenue was invariable, regardless of the harvest, and had to be paid punctually.
- They followed the sunset law.

IV The powers of the Zamindars limited:

- The permanent settlement limited the powers of the zamindars to collect the rent from the ryot and manage his zamindari.

The rise of the jotedars

- A group of rich peasants consolidated their position in the villages.
- This class of rich peasant was known as jotedar.
- The jotedars had acquired vast areas of land.
- They controlled local trade as well as money lending, exercising immense power over the poorer cultivators of the region.
- A large part of their land was cultivated through sharecrop.
- When the estate of the zamindar was auctioned for failure to make revenue payment, jotedars were often among the purchasers.
- The jotedars were the most powerful in North Bengal, in some places they were called haoladars, gantidars or Mendal.

The accounts of Buchanan

- He was an employee of the British East India Company.
  - He marched everywhere with a large army of people – draughtsmen, surveyors, palanquin bearers, coolies.
  - The cost of the travels was borne by the East India Company.
  - He was perceived as an agent of the sarkar.
  - He observed the stones and rocks and different strata and layers of soil.
  - He searched for minerals and stones that were commercially valuable, he recorded all signs of iron ore and mica, granite and saltpeter.
  - He carefully observed the local practices of salt-making and iron ore mining.
