
Snake
by - D. H. Lawrence

- A snake came to the poet's water-trough.
 - In this poem, the poet describes his encounter in detail with the snake that had come to drink water from his water-trough on a hot day.
 - He reveals his response towards the presence of the snake at his water-trough.
 - On seeing the snake, the poet experiences conflicting emotions because he is under the influence of education and civilization that have shaped his thought processes.
 - Instinctively, he begins to like the snake and treats him like a guest who has come to drink water at his water-trough.
 - But rationally, he thinks that he should kill the snake.
 - So, he hurls a log at the snake to harm him.
 - The whole poem revolves around the snake.
 - He reached down from a crack in the earth-wall and came to the water-trough.
 - The snake quenched his thirst and proceeded to go away.
 - He put his head into the dreadful black hole in the wall.
 - He picked up a log of wood and threw at the snake.
 - The poet immediately regretted at his 'vulgar' and 'mean' act.
 - He was fascinated by the presence of the snake who seemed to him like a king.
 - He wanted to atone for his 'pettiness'.
