the energies of him who would reach the summit. By experience a man can learn how obstacles are to overcome by grappling with them. Thus difficulties often fall away of themselves before the determination to overcome them. In nine cases out of ten, if marched boldly upon, they will flee away. Like thieves, they often disappear at a glance. What looks like impossible obstacle like some great mountain chain in our way, is found to become practicable when approached, and paths formerly uneven, though the way may be narrow and difficult, open a way for us through the hills.
